Proposed Creative Europe project – to which project are you looking for partners?

Sector or field	Performing arts; inclusive culture; cultural participation; arts and social inclusion; cultural education; cultural heritage; audiovisual documentation.
Description or summary of the proposed project	Pulse Art is looking to develop a transnational cooperation project focused on inclusive cultural participation and the professional development and visibility of artists with disabilities and other artists facing barriers to cultural participation. The project would bring together cultural and performing arts organisations from different Creative Europe countries to exchange practices, develop accessible artistic activities and create opportunities for artists to work, learn and present their work across borders. Building on Pulse Art's long-standing experience in inclusive cultural production and audiovisual storytelling, the project would explore how culture and the performing arts can contribute to greater participation, visibility and recognition of artistic talent. Possible activities include artistic exchanges, mentoring, workshops, public presentations, audience-development activities and documentation of practices and outcomes.

	The project would place particular emphasis on inclusion, accessibility, audience engagement and the exchange of practical approaches between organisations working in different cultural contexts. Pulse Art is open to co-developing the final project concept with European partners, building on the complementary expertise, experience and resources of the participating organisations.
Partners currently involved in the project	None confirmed at this stage. Pulse Art is seeking European cultural and performing arts organisations and other relevant partners to co-develop the project concept and consortium.
